

My Summers Experience

I had the opportunity to intern with the Capital Markets Origination (CMO) team at Citibank. My internship was divided into two segments wherein I engaged with the debt capital markets team for the first four weeks and the equity capital market team for the remaining period of four weeks. Over the duration of my internship I completed three projects which provided me vast exposure in three very different aspects of capital markets.

The first project was aimed at identifying firms that may require debt funding in the next two years. This was accomplished by projecting the cash flows of over 50 companies and giving recommendations based on its analysis. The second required identifying potential block trade opportunities in the equity markets. This project involved extensive data collection regarding the shareholding pattern of the target firms. The last project dealt with analyzing the lag effects between the performance of the primary and secondary equity capital markets.

It was interesting and rewarding to receive an opportunity to work on multiple live deals as well as experiencing all stages from sourcing to execution. An extremely talented and supportive team made the long hours that we spent in office memorable. In retrospect, it was an enriching internship and I look forward to building on this experience.
